

SELL MORE

AS AN UNTETHERED SELLER

What Are You Tethered To?

A moment to look beneath what you can see.

IMAGINE THIS

You walk into a sales situation already carrying a story about what might happen. Maybe you hesitate before making the call. Sit in the car before walking into the networking event. Avoid an account because the last interaction felt uncomfortable. Or keep preparing for an opportunity instead of stepping into it. From the outside, the behavior may look like procrastination, avoidance, preparation, or simply being busy. But after listening to Day 2, consider this: what if the behavior isn't the whole story?

What the Untethered Seller knows:

The Untethered Seller has discovered that what she can see on the outside doesn't always tell her what's happening on the inside. She has learned to become curious about the hesitation, the avoidance, the assumptions, and the stories she creates—because the behavior is what she can see; the tether is what she's trying to discover.

Now, look beneath what you can see.

01

As you listened to today's stories, what behavior or moment felt most familiar to you—and why?

02

Think about a recent sales situation that didn't go the way you hoped. What story did you tell yourself about what happened?

You don't have to change the story today. For now, simply notice that it's there.
